Let's start a conversation...
about death and dying

When someone we love dies and we plan their funeral we are often left making decisions with no idea what they would have wanted. At a time when we are grieving this is a huge challenge and can lead to disagreements within families.

If we can create an open culture in which we are comfortable talking about death and dying we can share our wishes with our family and improve the experience for those left making the arrangements for our funeral.

Talking about death isn't easy. Many people find it painful to think about their own or family members mortality, some even think that addressing such topics might bring on misfortune.

Starting a conversation about death and dying is hard but the best time to have those conversations is while you are well.

Join us for an evening where we can break the taboo and get the conversation started.

We will share with you all the options for personalising a funeral and show you how we care for your loved one after the service. You will leave with the tools you need to start thinking about your own funeral and hopefully the confidence to share your wishes with your family.

Some feedback from previous visits.

'This visit was really amazing - it was such a powerful session and it was a real privilege to be invited behind the scenes to witness the things that we saw. It was definitely a very unique opportunity to be able to ask questions to a group of professionals in a very safe space.'

'I found the whole event to be extremely interesting and informative and given the subject matter, it was dealt with in the most respectful and dignified manner. All the staff were lovely and were happy to answer any questions that were asked.'

Are you ready to get the conversation started?
